Braveass

By Shamir Sarif

I feel as if I have two souls in me. The soul of a knight full of hot courage, the same knight who makes an enemy of death and is a brave advocate for love and life. These heroic ideals have always weighed on me I suppose, yet it wasn't until the long days of desolation that I noticed the mask slipping. He cannot know. That if I carry him, the immortal Don Quixote, then I must also carry Sancho Panza. One with a thin frame, lacking any material wealth, the other stout and rather fond of noodles and netflix. Travelling across my mind in harmony, a brave knight followed by an ass.
